Primary vs. Secondary Sources Notes

Primary sources

• Text: an account of an event by someone who took part in or witnessed the event
• A primary source is an original object or document (first-hand information).
• A primary source is material written or produced in the time period that you may be investigating.
• Primary sources enable the researcher to get as close as possible to what actually happened during an historical event or time period.

Examples of Primary Sources

• Diaries and journals
  • Example: Anne Frank was a teenager during World War II. She kept a diary or journal the years before she died in a concentration camp. Her diary was later published as the “Diary of Anne Frank”. This is a primary source.
• Autobiographies
  • An autobiography is when you write a story or book about yourself.
    • Example: Nelson Mandela wrote his autobiography about events in his life called “Long Walk to Freedom: The Autobiography of Nelson Mandela. This is a primary document because he wrote his first hand experiences.
• Speeches
  • Examples of Speeches: Abraham Lincoln’s “Gettysburg Address,” Martin Luther King’s “I Have a Dream,” all of the Presidents’ Inauguration Speeches.
• Historical documents
  • Example: Birth Certificates, government records, art
• Published first-hand accounts, or stories
  • Example: 2008 Presidential candidate Senator John McCain talked about his “own” experiences as a Vietnam prisoner of war. It is a primary source because he was there, experienced the events and shared it first hand.
• Sound Recordings and interviews
  • Example 1: During the Great Depression and World War II, television had not been invented yet. The people would often sit around the radio to listen to President Roosevelt’s war messages. Those radio addresses are considered “primary sources.”
  • Example 2: During the 2008 election Barack Obama had many interviews that were televised. Those interviews are considered primary sources.
• Photographs and videos
  • Example 1: Photographers during World War II took photographs of battles and/or events during the war. Those photographs are primary sources. Those were taken during actual events.
• Letters
  • Example: Soldiers during wars wrote to their families about war events they experienced. Those letters are considered primary sources.
Primary vs. Secondary Sources Notes

Secondary Sources

- Text: information gathered by someone who did not take part in or witness an event
- A secondary source is something written about a primary source.
- Secondary sources are written "after the fact" - that is, at a later date.
- Usually the author of a secondary source will have studied the primary sources of an historical period or event and will then interpret the "evidence" found in these sources.
- You can think of secondary sources as second-hand information.
- Think about it like this….
  - If I tell you something, I am the primary source. If you tell someone else what I told you, you are the secondary source.
  - Secondary source materials can be articles in newspapers, magazines, books or articles found that evaluate or criticize someone else's original research.

Examples of Secondary Sources

- Almanacs, encyclopedias, history books (textbooks), etc. are all secondary sources because they were written “after” the events occurred.
- Biography
  - Example: A biography is when you write about another person’s life. Alice Fleming wrote a biography on the life of Martin Luther King Jr. This is a secondary document. It was written about him after he died.

Primary or Secondary Sources?

- Newspaper and Magazine articles can be a primary or secondary source.
  - If the article was written at the time something happened, then it is a primary source.
  - Example: The articles written on Barack Obama’s inauguration in 2009 are primary sources.
  - However, if a reporter in 2009 wrote about George Washington’s inauguration using information written by someone else (1789), that would be a secondary source.
